TYPE OF PROJECT	DESCRIPTION
Change project	Aims to change behaviour, attitudes, culture, etc., in an organization.
Technical project	Construction of a house, construction of new metro, etc.
Software project	Development of brand-new software from scratch.
Analysis project / Feasibility study	Project that involves researching something thoroughly. Used, for example, as a pre-project before we commit ourselves fully to the task.
Supply Project	Some equipment is supplied to a customer.
Adaptation project	A standard IT system is adapted to the customer's needs.
Rollout project / Implementation project	An IT system, a specific production method, a standard for shop fit-out, etc., is rolled out to users. The IT system itself, the production method, the standard for shop decoration, etc., has been developed in a previous project.
Development project	A project that creates something new, such as a new model of washing machine. The work requires innovation and innovation.
Construction project	Solves a predefined task.
Negotiation project	Finds a solution among several possible. Compromise and political decision-making. Example: work on committees.
Strategic project	A project that has a strategic objective, i.e., it creates the premise for future results. For example, a project that is about developing managers and employees.
Operational project	A project that has an operational objective, i.e., creates current results. For example, a project aimed at rationalising the production in a company.

FIGURE 11.2
Examples of project types.